Turks Balk At Russian Talks Plan

But the Turkish reply, present-ed to Soviet Ambassador Vassili Gronbyskof by Foreign Minister Turan Gunes, made it clear that the plan was not acceptable to the Ankara government.

'Turkey, while appreciating the constructive attitude taken by the Soviet Union since the very be-ginning of the Cyprus conflict, has reservations about the Soviet suggestion for involving a large number of states in the Cyprus issue," it said.

In Nicosia, Cyprus President Glafkos Clerides today formally notified the Soviet Union of his government's acceptance of the Russian proposal

tion of the island's independence. They would also open the way for permanent members of the Security Council to decide the future of other countries which, like Cyprus, faced problems that caused international concern.

"The experiences of the recent past are not sufficient to demonstrate that some permanent members of the Security Council have always acted in compliance with the principles of impertiality, fairness and objectivity," the Turkish statement said.

Turkey also said that the Soviet plan would prolong discussions indefinitely.

Development was discouraged.

The faintest murmur of political activity was crushed. Isolationism was built like a fortress. Education was ignored. The elite ensconced themselves in the pleasantries of life. The natives endured their ignorance. The result was the perfect

Arms Deal of Century' Ripe As NATO Renews Air Forces

News Analysis

By James Goldsbotough

PARIS, Aug. 27 (IHT).-The stakes in the "arms deal of the century," as it is called here, are more than the billions of dollars in aircraft contracts alone. At stake, in the eyes of many Europeans, is the survival of a European aircraft industry.

Many Americans, and others at the SHAPE and NATO commands in Belgium, look rather to the importance of standardization of aircraft among NATO members, and to that end believe an American plane is the best buy.

For the last several weeks, French officials and aircraft-industry spokesmen have been leaking details of the negotiations under way to replace 350 aging F-104 Starfighter jets in the Dutch, Belgian, Danish and Norwegian Air Forces. These contracts are expected to be worth at least $2 hillion over the next few years and represent the first sales in what is expected to he an eventual 3.500-plane market worth some $30 hillion in coming years. The principal antagonists in this sales contest are the French company, Dassault-Breguet, and two American firms, Northrop and General Dynamics. For Prance, Dassault and the Mirage it would be a tremendous coup to fill these contracts. Money aside, it would give the French industry a more "European" aspect and make France a prime supplier for NATO, an organization of which France is an uncertain memher.

It is certain that some European countries believe France can be made into a surer member of the alliance through increased European arms cooperation and production.

Last May, the four buyer countries set up a steering committee in hopes of reaching a common decision. Apart from the Mirage F-1 M-53, two other European planes were given consideration, the Anglo-French Jaguar and the Viggan, made by Saab of Sweden. Two American planes were in the running, General Dynamics YF-16 and Northrop's YF-17 Cohra. The real choice, according to experts was between the French and Americans, though the British were firmly pushing the Jaguar.

If the French could argue that Europeans should choose a European fighter, the Americans' political reasoning was no less compelling. Washington argued that this was not only a chance for greater standardization of planes, important for military reasons, but that through the purchase of U.S. planes the Euro-

The Kurds seek to unite Kurds living in a crescent-shaped region going from Turkey through Iraq to Iran in an independent Kurdistan. For among other reasons, because much of its petroleum resources lies in areas claimed by the Kurds, the 1raql government has strongly resisted this goal, saying that it is willing to give the Eurds only limited antenomy within the Iraqi nation.

The ruling Ba'ath party's newspaper in Baghdad. Al Thawra, charged Iran with supporting the Kurds with arms, ammunition and other material suppues and said that it was clear "the Iranian authorities hope to strike the Iraqi revolution through the

'Auto Plant Aide Shot in Argentina

CORDOBA, Argentina, Aug. 27 (AP).-The labor relations manager of the French-owned auto company Ika-Renault was killed today, and the firm's two plants here were shut down.

Ricardo Boya, 55, was gunned dorn when his car was blocked by several vehicles on his way to work, police said. Three companions, helieved to be bodyzuarás, were not injured.

Tka-Renault, a subsidiary of Renault of France and the Cordoba local of the auto workers union have been locked in a pay dispute for four months. Local leftist leaders of the union bave clashed with right-wing national union leaders over the pay dispeans would be offset in some of the cost of U.S. forces in Europe. It was pointed out that Congress might find it hard to maintain these force levels without significant Atlantic alliance arms cooperation.

Heavy Pressure

The pressures on the four governments were intense, French Americans and British promised favorable credit arrangements. and all promised that the planes would be assembled in the home countries, assuring national labor They all vaunted the merits of their planes, the French asserting that the Mirage would last well into the 1980s, when Dassault's ACF 'avion de combat futur' will be ready. The British held out possibilities for future participation in the Anglo-West German-Italian MRCA fighter project, the plane that will rival Dassault's

Both the YF-16 and YF-17 American planes are prototypes, hased on the new concept of a "lightweight" fighter one that is supposed to be technically superior to the older, heavier planes, and cheaper, reversing the trend to hig, $10-million-to-15-million planes like the MRCA. They will be in the $5-$6 million class, as is the Mirage F-1. They are at present engaged in competition at Edwards Air Force Base. The U.S. Air Force is expected to order 600 planes from the winner.

The French say the U.S. planes are untested, unproven and nn-suited to European duty. The Americans say that the Mirage is obsolescent, and that even the French Air Force has not hought the F-1 M-53 model that France is trying to sell. This latter point. embarrassing for Dassault, will prohably soon be changed, with the French Alr Force acquiring at least a token number of F-1 M53s. It will he done, however, over objections of the air force, which does not want different versions of the same F-1 plane.

Separate Decisions

Despite desires at both NATO and SHAPE to standardize the new planes, it now appears that political pressures will force the four countries to make separate decisions. Though officially they are saving nothing, several private opinions have indicated that Belgium, seeking 118 planes, is leaning toward the Mirage: Holland seeking 105 planes, is leaning toward the YF-17, with the Danes and Norwegians delaying their choice for another year or

According to these views, the Belgian Defense Ministry, which has always had a close relationship to Dassault, feels it cannot resist the French offer. The Dutch company, Fokker, partly owned by Northrop, gives the Northrop plane an advantage in the Netherlands. The Danes and Norwegians, neither of which has in the past, now must consider their actions in light of their relationships in the European Economic Community, Norway, which has a free-trade status with the community, recently was visited by an 18-man team from Dassault, but the Norwegians, it is said, do not want a French plane.

West Germany, whose weight could be decisive in a competition such as this, has special problems. The West Germans bare some 600 fout of an original 800) Starfighters left, and recently began replacement through the purchase of 200 F-4 Phantoms. The West Germans also are involved in joint production of the MRCA which flew for the first time this month. The MRCA's projected cost of about $10 million per plane has kept Bonn from thinking of immediate replacement of its F-104s, but Bonn eventually is expected to order some 250 lightweight planeselther American or French.

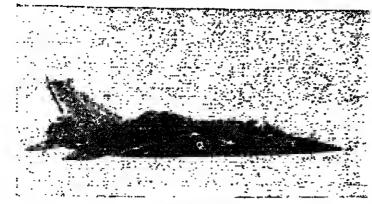

Germans Torn

The West Germans, like the other four, are torn between the need to nourish a European industry and what most technicians see as the superiority of the American prototypes. Bonn also remembers the French refusal to participate in the MRCA program, a decision which led to Prance's own ACF program.

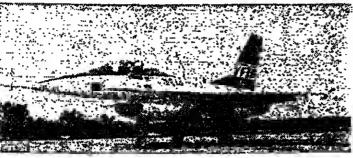

The Americans believe quite simply that only naked political pressure could bring Belgium to choose the Mirage. But this is to underestimate the feeling in many European quarters that the Freech aircraft industry is the only hope for maintaining a strong European aircraft industry, especially if the Dassault-Breguet group eventually is nationalized, as many expect. There is a growing feeling in Europe that the absurd and costly duplication of planes in Europesuch as the MRCA-ACF rivalry or the Jaguar-Mirage F1-must be ended li Europe is to close the 5-to-10-year aircraft technology gap with America. The obvious loser in this struggle is NATO and the alliance. Instead of all members flying a single plane, simplifying ground maintenance, crew requirements, languages and replacement problems, the diversification will be worse than ever. Whereas the Starfighter was the standard plane in the last generation, in the next, the alles will be flying Mirages, Cohras, Phantoms, Jaguars, MRCA3 and ACPs while the Warsaw Pact countries all fly MiGs. As for standardization, one European 'non-French' remarked. "Why don't the Americans buy the Mirage?"

U.S. to Require *Act of Contrition Of Draft Dodgers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (AP).
—Attorney General William Saxbe says the Ford administration's conditional amnesty plan for Vietnam-era draft dodgers will require at least "en act of contrition" and, at most, two years of public service. Mr. Saxbe said last night that the amnesty will carry an assurance that the men will not be imprisoned. "What we're talking about is that we're going to give these people a chance if they want il," he said.

President Ford has asked the Justice and Defense Departments to develop proposals that would allow fugitive draft evaders and deserters to return to the United Slates under certain conditions. Mr. Saxbc said the administration will insist on the "act of contrition." A draft dodger will "have to come into either the Draft Board, the U.S. attorney, the state Selective Servic; headquarters or a special commission and say, I'm sorry, I want to take my medicine." He said the medicine could "run from an extreme of two years of substantial assistance to some hospital some public works, some good works of various kinds that's the most we can expect," down to a minimum requirement of an apprerance at a quasi-judicial proceeding at which charges would he dropped for a promise of good behavior.

WASHINTON, Aug. 27 (WP).— profit rates in meat processing Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz and retailing." said yesterday that there was no reason for "panic buying" of food supplies despite the substantial effects of this summer's drought on U.S. crop prospects. He also predicted that retail food prices would rise less than 10 per cent in 1975.

However, Agriculture Department economists have recently raised their projections of this year's increase in retail food prices from 13 to 15 per cent. Other administration forecasts peg the annual rise at about 10 per cent, However, further cuts in farm output-coupled with continued strong demand-could put the annual increase as high as 19 per cent, according to the latest national food situation re-

The Agriculture Department also released a report yesterday on the farm-to-retail-price spread for red meat, which it said was higher at the end of 1973 and in the first half of 1974 than at any time in the last 10 years.

The Difference

The spread-the difference between what the farmer is paid for the raw product and what the shopper pays for the finished -averaged around 55 cents from March to July of this year, almost double the 29-cent spread from 1963 to 1968.

Based on "circumstantial evidence," the report said. "it appears that the recent increase in partially by food retailers changing their pricing policies to in-crease profits in their meat departments."

The Coast Guard confirmed yesterday that two sailing and motor yachts have been hijacked ing can be accomplished easily and the owners disposed of without much fear of apprehension.

A Coast Guard spokesman said the service had received reports on the disappearance of more than 30 yachts in the last three years. but said the causes of the disappearances were unknown in most

The spokesman said that three of the yachts subsequently had been identified as being hijacked and two of the three had been identified as hijacked by alleged drug runners.

Another yacht has since been discovered in foreign waters and the foreign country is now investigating the claim of the persons on board that the crew had fallen overboard, the Coast Guard spokesman said.

Asked about an earlier report from a Coast Guard source that there has been a pattern involving 25 to 30 missing motor yachts that could have been hijacked for the running of drugs from Carib-bean countries to the southeastern coast of the United States the spokesman confirmed that the number was correct but said he could not speculate as to the causes of the disappearances until the yachts were found.

Coast Guard officials in New York, Miami and Houston also said they had no evidence of large numbers of boats being hijacked by drug smugglers.

"It's a grossly exaggerated report," said Bill Stevens, who has been involved for 24 years in Caribbean yachting and runs a New York City company that manages about 100 Caribbean charter boats. "To our knowledge there have been maybe two or three such cases." he said.

Bill Robinson, the editor of Yachting magazine, said he had heard of only one case of boat hijacking by smugglers. He said that it was extremely unlikely that such cases would go unre-

Quebec's New Language Law Draws Mounting Opposition

By William Borders

Quebec's new language law, which has been the subject of increasingly generating opposition across Canada's nine other

The law, which makes French the official language of Quebec Province with a preferred status over English, has been strongly condemned on radio and television as far west as Vancouver, on Canada's west coast, since its enactment late last nonth.

In New Brunswick, on Canada's east coast, the provincial premier has asked Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau to refer the law to the Canadian Supreme Court for a ruling on its constitution-

In Churchill, Manitoba, small scaport on Hudson Bay, a bus driver, displaying detailed knowledge of the legislation, said: "After all the time and money we've spent to make Canada a o-language country, to think that Quebec would go and take such a backward step."

Several constitutional experts have expressed doubts about the provincial law and there is increasing pressure for some action from Mr. Trudeau, who, although he is a Montreal French Canadian, is thought to consider the legislation unwise.

Preferred Laurage. The law, an attempt to end 300 years of ambiguity about language in Quebec, makes French the preferred language of commerce, government, the courts and education in this province of six million inhabi-

Quebec's premier, Robert Bourassa, who, like almost everyone else in Quebec politics, is a French Canadian, said:

"Henceforth, there is an officially French state in North America. It is a moment of great pride for all of us," Because the new law leaves wide discretionary powers to the civil servants who will administer it, there are still many unanswered questions about how it will change Quebec's daily life. But since it makes French the preferred language, corporations that use French in their internal communications, for example, will be more likely to get provincial government contracts than those that do not.

Many of the law's provisions simply give legal force to what has become established practice in Quebec, like the requirement that all English-language corporate names have French versions as well or that professional people be proficient in French. Linguistic Rights

The law guarantees the lin-guistic rights of the 13 per cent of the people in the province adding that it would be "a serious whose native language is English, including the right to public education of their children in their own language.

But many of Quebec's English Canadians, who have been among the richest and the most powerful people here, regard the legislation as a confirmation that their days as an elite are over. They have staged emotional protest rallies and some Canadians say that the English-speaking community here is now more resentful than it has ever been before.

The most militant Frenchspeaking separatists also oppose the language law, because they maintain that it does not go far enough in preserving the French language, which they see as under assault from all sides. Although relatively few Canadians outside Quebec speak French, the country is officially bilingual. During Mr. Trudeau's

"For all practical purposes, this is an in-house study." said Dr. Daniel Ford, a prominent critic of the nuclear industry who is an official of the Union of Concerned Scientists in Cambridge, Mass.

Financial Risk

In a telephone interview, Dr. Ford asked why the builders of nuclear power plants and the public ntilities that operate them taken of risks posed to the public by the estimated 100 nuclear still refuse to accept the financial risk of accidents that are possible "if the statistics are so much in their favor?"

Dr. Ford said that, but for the use federal funds to indemnify victims for losses exceeding $110 million suffered through reactor accidents, "there would be no new plants at all."

Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, expressed skepticism about the study's findings. He said that he doubted that the statistical sis was either valid or pos-

There are now 51 plants in operation. About 100 are expected to be generating electric power by the end of the decade. The study devoted itself to the large water-cooled reactors now in use, rather than the high-temperature gas-cooled and liquid-metal fartbreeder reactors that are under development and are expected to go into service about 1990.

Local Population In examining reactor safety, the study considered how it would affect the 15 million people or more now living within 20 miles of a nuclear power reactor, rather than the total population. Dr. Rasmussen explained that the nation's total population was not at risk because the detonation of nuclear power plants, like atomic bombs, was "impossible because of the fuel they use."

In seeking to define risk, the study reported that the likelihood of being injured in any one year in a reactor accident is "one chance in 150 million."

"From a broader societal viewpoint, one individual of the 15 militon people living in the vicini-ty of 100 reactors might be killed and two individuals might be injured every 25 years," the study

The Lonely Eagle

They called him the "Lone Eagle" when celebrated by mass adulation of the spectache flew solo to Paris in 1927, and evoked a temple of adulation that was as much an echo of the times as a reflection of his own will, courage and skill. Without those, Charles Augustus Lindbergh would have faded from public recollection, like so many other heroes and heroines of an age of ballyhoo. With them, he lived to make many contributions to technology and to controversy, in alternating periods of encompassing publicity and privacy. And when he died and was buried, in deliberately understated simplicity in the tranquillity of Kipahuin, on Maui, he could still be called an enigma of his times—a lonely eagle.

He had the courage of his convictions, and if they sent him in the Spirit of St. Louis to Paris, or sustained him through the kidnapping and death of his son, when the searchlight of popular curiosity was turned on him even more pitilessly than in his first days of triumph, he bore himself well. Nor did he lack dignity when, in his gravest public error, he equated Nazi Germany with Western civilization, and sought to prevent the United States from joining to cast it out. His researches, in aeronautics, in geography, in-with Dr. Alexis Carrel-the technology of healing, were notable. His final efforts toward the conservation of the earth'e primitive resources of men and materials were effective and praiseworthy. Clearly, Lindbergh was far more than an inflatable mannikin pumped to more than human size by the gassy tendencies of the 1920s, when reality was likely to be obscured, and

But how did that adulation deflect and how did it strengthen Lindbergh? Perhaps his widow. Anne Morrow Lindbergh, a writer of grace, sensitivity and insight, could tell. But few others can peer behind the pendulum swings of praise and attack that marked his public life, or determine just how individuality, well marked, and based on exceptional personal qualities, could becme a brand of elitism that was to influence, to his detriment, his approach to human affairs.

Charles Lindbergh was, without question, a significant figure of his times, emerging from obscurity and seeking it again, victim of and gainer by an age of far-reaching curiosity which had swift means of satisfying itself. He was an explorer who, when it was a matter of exploiting technical resources for his searches, worked well and productively; in the realm of ideas his curious limitations set up walls beyond which he could not

Perhaps, like Robert Louis Stevenson, who also rests on a Polynesian hillside, "the hunter home" might serve as Lindbergh'e epitaph: He did not always know what game he sought, nor was he always successful in winning what he was after; his legacy is not the affection Stevenson still holds, nor will Lindbergh's deeds have the lasting quality of the author's. But Lindbergh never rested from his quest for something of importance until he reached his grave by Kipahulu's little church.

The Decline of the Lion

For almost six decades, the mountainous, remote northeastern African empire of Ethiopla has been ruled by the firm hand of Emperor Hailie Selassie, known to his subjects as the King of Kings, the Conquering Lion of Judah. He was for decades Africa's best known leader and statesman, a beleaguered symbol of the fight against Fascism before World War II and the personification of the glories of the continent's precolonial past. His rule extended to every hamlet of his kingdom, and nothing was done that he might disapprove of in the mildest of ways.

The days of the rule of the Lion, at age 82, have all but ended. The middle level of his army is in control of most of the country. The military has nationalized his palace; his friends from the roling class languish in jail, and the once all-powerful ruler is at best today a constitutional monarch, a symbol of the state, but not a political leader who can work his will on events to any great extent. Little by little he is being forced to cede even the semblance of power. Ethiopia is headed for another era. * * * .

In this passage of power, even though the West loses one of its staunchest friends in Africa, there is a hopeful side for the people of Ethiopia. Traditionally, it has been one of the poorest countries on the continent. Its peasants have been through a series of recent food shortages; political corruption was rampant and land reform impossible. The ruling class of the Amharas was unyielding in its opposition to any reordering of the wealth of the society. Now many of them are among the 300 or so formerly powerful landed rulere who are in fail while the army decides the fate of Ethlooia.

This development has been several years in the making, brought about by the food shortages, inflation, a government that was increasingly remote from the needs of its people and a cultural and religious tradition that resisted many changes that are crucial in the modern age. One example of the impact of cultural and religious tradition is Ethiopia's 150 days a year of fasting, imposed by the Coptic Church, Government workers complained to no avail that spending almost half the year in fasting was bringing chaos to the country's economy. The elders would not budge. Finally, after two governments failed, the military stepped in and took over, wresting power from the roling class in general and from Selassie in particular.

The Lion of Judah was an enduring figure on the world scene. His valiant battle against the Italian invaders in 1936 won for him and for Ethiopia the praise of the world. His visits to the United States always evoked a great deal of interest because his style was so impressive in a man only 5 feet 3 inches tall. His real stature was hard to estimate, just as it has always been hard for friends of Ethiopia to understand why the Emperor permitted his countrymen to continue to languish in painful poverty while a ruling class grew fatter and fatter and more corrupt with each passing day.

* * * What the military will be able to accomplish remains problematical. The needs of the peasants and urban underclass are staggering. The machinery of government is etill years behind the governments of many other countries on the continent, and the country is still in the midst of a great hunger. In the past, great change in the Ethiopian leadership has been accompanied by great upheaval. So far, the military has assumed control without any serious violence. If that should continue to be the case, it would augur well for change in Ethiopia. a change its people desperately need.

Diplomacy and Cyprus

Yet if Greece is to return to Geneva, there will also have to be some diplomatic work in Ankara. There have been one or two eigne recently that Turkey regards the extent of the territory it occupies in Cyprus as negotiable, but still not enough to bring back the Greeks to the negotiating table. Here the diplomacy will have to come primarily from the United States and the message is a relatively simple one: The biggest danger facing Turkey at present is overconfidence. It is one thing to win a military victory. another to enforce a military solution. The Turks need to show flexibility now before it becomes too late.

-From the Financial Times (London).

* * * The important thing is not that Greece should be seen to be in the right, but that Turkey ehould make concessions. Putting Turkey in the dock of a kind of international kangaroo court is hardly likely to achieve that result. What is needed is for Turkey's leaders to be convinced by their friends (which means essentially the Americans, though Pakistan and Iran may also have

But it is likely that the Moroccan King will look twice before engaging in a test of strength with Madrid: In the first place because he is in an inferior position militarily, and perhaps more importantly because he will hesitate to compromise fruitful relations of cooperatlon that his country has maintained with Spain since the end of the protectorate.

SPETSAIS, Greece,-Right after announcing withdrawal of Greek armed forces from NATO, Premier Caramanlis overhauled the command of those forces, firing all top leaders associated with the previous junta and with the boomerang Cyprus coup that touched off Turkey's invasion. The odd thing is that the men now named to command have all been pro-NATO enthusiasts.

It will take months before Athens unsurambles its ideas on relations with the Western alliance. So far it merely says it will emulate France, which pulled out troops but retained political membership. Separatism

For better than a year the East Berlin regime, as part of its drive toward separatism and demarcation, has been trying to expunge the word "German" and to obliterate all references to "Germany" wherever possible.

Last January the East German government, in one of those seemingly endless little moves toward separatism and de-Germanization, abolished what may have been the last vestige and symbol of German togetherness-the "D" emblem on East German cars and substituted the sign "DDR."

That was a blow to those West Germans dedicated and committed to the idea of eventual reunification. But an even bigger blow was the appearance on the market of a paste-on emblem reading "BRD."

A Greek Military Scandal

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON,-Blatant misuse of American military aid by the custed Greek military dictatorship, which probably caused the junta's fatal maction in the Cyptus crisis, is about to be exposed in a major international scandal—threatening the per-manent end of U.S. military aid to Greece and widening the dangerous Washington - Athens

This scandal, a closely-held secret within the new civilian government of Premier Constantine Caramanlis (which had nothing whatever to do with it), may help explain the sudden collapse of the military junta following Turkey's invasion of Cyprus. Tur-key's more was triggered by the Greek junta's overthrow of Archbishop Makarios as President of Cyprus on July 15.

Caramanlis and his top aides, including Foreign Minister George Mayros, are convinced the junta was preparing for military opera-tions across the Turkish border Thrace immediately following Turkey's decision to intervene militarily on Cyprus.

But when the junta mobilized the Greek reserves, military stores of U.S. aid-rifles, ammunition, boots, machine guns and rockets were discovered to be totally

Filler in Crates

Crates of the American M-16 rifle, for one example, were found to contain one or two layers of rifles at the top, with rocks, wood and other filler material hidden

The discovery of this shocking shortfall of arms and equipment was the final nail in the coffin of the junta, already under heavy political pressures for its stumbling Cyprus adventure.

The full extent of the disappearance of American arms aid is still not known. Some wellinformed experts on the outrages perpetrated by seven years of Greek military rule believe the arms were sold for each to foreign countries, possibly in Black Africa, behind the backs of regular military commanders.

But wholly apart from the devastating impact on the junta itself, the discovery of the shortfall reites profound questions about Greece's military defenses in its role as a member of NATO. Caramanlis, pressured by the Turkish Cyprus invasion into an anti-American posture, withdrew Greece from the military arm of NATO two weeks ago.

Unapara

High officials here are unaware of the Caramanlis-Mayros investigation which revealed the junta's inability to mobilize the Greek reserve. That investigation is now centered on three major military depots: Attica, the site in the Athens-Piracus area of major Greek military installations, Lerissa, in central Greece, the headquarters of the First Army, and Salonika, Greece'e Jeccond city and the headquarters of the Third Army Corps.

Although U.S. administration officials are in the dark, key members of four congressional committees the Foreign Rela-tions and Armed Services Comees of both Senate and House -have been apprised of the scan-dal by Elias Demetracopoulos, the best-informed anti-junta Greek exile here the past seven years. He recently returned to Washington from high-level talks in Geneva with officials of the Caramanlia government.

Key congressional committee members, including one senator who supported U.S. military sid to Greece even during the mili-tery dictatorship, will soon demand a complete investigation t the General Accounting Offic congressional watchdog over go ernment spending.

The results of that probe cou be dynamite. In 1971, Re Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, push through Congress a ben on U. military grant aid to Greec Only last week Rep. Hays autho ed a bill to repeal that ban, (grounds that grant aid could ! restored now that the colonewere gone.

Covering the 'Crazy Fool' Who Flew the Ocean

By Waverley Root PARIS, Aug. 27 (IRT) -On the morning of May 21, 1927, I reported for work at the office, of the Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune; I had been a member of its day staff for about a week. B. J. Kospoth, the city editor, lifted his head to seknowledge my arrival. "The crazy fool!" he said. "He'll never make it." And cackled.

-Who'll never make it? 'I' asked.

"Feller named Lindbergh. Thinks he's going to fly the At-lantic." He cackled again.

Kospoth had a peculiar laugh, midway between the whinny of a soprano horse and a short blast from a rusty machine gun. It fascinated the managing editor's French wife, who had made a verb out of it. She would sit beside her husband's desk her eyes fixed, sidewise, on Kospoth, whispering at intervals, "Is he going to kospother?"

She should have been in the office that day. Kospoth lifted his head at half-hour intervals to bay, "The crazy fool! He'll nr er make it." Cackle.

I left the office at the end of my work day assuming also that he would never make it. At that time I had faith in the mistlibility of city editors, Besides, nobody had sighted Lindbergh over the Atlantic. I must have where I had no radio; few people bothered with them in 1927, for they made peculiar noises. So I arrived at the office on the morning of May 22 in unwitting inn. cace of what everybody else in Paris seemed to know

Morning After

"Where the hell you been?" Ecspith snarled. "Get over to the embessy right away and cover the press conference." Whe! press conference?" I asked. "Lindbergh. The crazy fool! He made it." There was no cackle. Disappointment?

I speot the next two weeks loping after Lindbergh, who was being shuttled at an exhausting pace from one celebration to another, in utter bewilderment at the fuss everybody was making over him. This close view compensated to some extent for having missed the arrival about which I was copiously filled in by my colleagues. As I recall the details today, Lindbergh's plane the Irula coast; that allowed time for a human tidal wave to pour out of Paris to Le Bourget, then the capital's only sirileld. and field is what it was, unless my memory has slipped a cogno runways, just grace. After that first sighting, I believe, he was not reported again until the noise of his motors was heard over Le Bourget, by then black with people. This surprised Lindbergh; he wondered what the crowd was doing there and, not wanting to lead anyone astray by barging into a party to which he had not been invited, explaloed to the first persons who reached the plane, My name's Liodbergh." It was

For those behind them, this was an identifying sign; they hoisted the souvenir hunter onto their shoulders and bore the wrong hero away. The diversion gave better-informed welcomers a chance to extricate Lindbergh from his plane and batter a way through the moh to the comparative calm of the administration building.

It was anything but calm elsewhere on the field. The newspapermen trying to cover the story engaged in an epic battle for possession of the telephones. The United Press, cannily, had made a deal with someone in anthority for exclusive use of all public telephone lines, and every booth was occupied by someone hired by UP to keep the line open and the door shut against the competition. Taking no time out to admire the foresightedness of this organization, the representatives of rival news-gathering institutions reacted by overturning the booth occupied by the chief UP cor-respondent Paving it. doorside down, on the floor, within it the imprisoned correspondent in the company of a useless phone whose wires had been ripped

In the battle royal which fol-lowed everybody lost. Editors naced their Paris offices, chew-ing their natis to the quick as-they waited for calls that never came; finally reporters began straggling in after having fought their way through the greatest traffic tie-up Paris bad ever experienced which had blocked the road all the way from Paris to Le Bourget.

Small Headline

In the office of the Paris Chicago Tribune, news editor Jules Frantz taking advantage of a lull when the soate of copy began to flow more slowly, nipped down to the composing room to see whether the managing editor, who was making up the paper, needed help. He found the printers locking up the front-page form to trundle it away. There was a twocolumn head-or perhaps even three on the Lindbergh story. Frantz screamed. "My God!" he shouted. "You've got to put a banner on that storyl Every paper in the world will have a banner on it tomorrow except the Deutscher Tageblatt!" The ME waved the form away to the room where the page mais were made; "Can't changa it now," he said. "I'll miss my bus." He was a man convinced that the whole aim of journalism was to get the paper on the press in time to catch the 2 a.m. bus home. The Chicago Tribine appeared with a miserly head on the biggest story since the Versailles Treaty. Frantz was right—or nearly right. Every other paper in the world did carry an eight-column banner-including the Deutscher Taochiait. Hank Wales, chief Paris correspondent for the home edition of the Chicago Tribune and its then flourishing foreign news service, had had a similar brush earlier in the evening. He had descended personally to the composing room to hand directly to the editor a carbon of the exclusive interview with Lindbergh which he was cabling to Chicago a tremendous concession, for the foreign news service considered the Paris edition as a form of vermin, and was more given to hiding its dispatches from it than to offering them.

"We don't need it," the ME told him, visibly irritated. "We've got the story. He landed. We're reporting if. That's all there is to it."

Fako Interview. Wales never a man to ha caught without an answer, was stunned into speechlessness this time. He turned and walked back upstairs, carrying the story for which Chicago subsequently sent him a bonus of $500, a princely sum in those days. It is painful to be obliged to record now that the interview was a Wales, a wily operator. had decided that it would be a waste of time making the long trip to Le Bourget when ha could just as well stay in his office and write a story on what he assumed Lindbergh would be likely to say. Being nobody's fool, he made arrangements with the embassy, where he was on the best of terms, to make sure that Lindbergh would neither deny that he had given an interview nor utter anything subsequently which would con-tradict what Wales a volunteer speech writer, had decided he ought to say. As a matter of fact, Lindbergh had little chance to contradict or confirm anything. During his entire stay in Paris, there were two press conferences a day at I can remember his saying at any of them was, "Uh." would theo be interrupted. The procedure was invariable. Twice a day I would push my way through the crowd which me mained permanently stationed. outside the embassy hoping to catch a glimpse of its hero, to see Lindbergh descend the statis into the embassy entrance hall.

Ambassador Myron Herrick was at one side of him, holding his left arm in a vice-like grip as though he feared he would get away (Lindbergh often looked as if he wanted to) and the resentative of the company which had built the Spirit of St. Louis had a similar arm lock on the right. The trio stopped a few steps from the bottom. The first question came. Lindbergh would open his mouth, but before he could answer, the ambassador would answer for him. if political implications were involved, or the aircraft man if it were a matter of the flight.

Voice of the Press Only once were both of them stymied, and it was Hank Wales who did it. "Say, Lindy." he demanded in his resping voice. speaking from the hole in the corner of his mouth where he usually kept his cigar, "did you have a crapper in that plane?" For the first time, Lindbergh had a chance to answer a question himself. He let it pass. The impression I gained as I followed Lindbergh around through reception after recep tion, banquet after banquet honor after honor, was that be was a nice, naive, simple youngster, sincerely unaware of the importance of his exploit and rather annoved by the ceremonies. I recall the first luncheon given for him et the Clos Normand, a now vanished restaurant on the edge of the Bois de Boulogne. A bewildering forest of glasses bloomed behind each plate. The hosts, whoever they were, had decided that at least half a dozen wines were required to rise fittingly to the occasion. Lindbergh regarded them with wonder. Then he pushed all of them out of his way and settled for mineral water. The gap between the guileless boy and the man who had succeeded in a magnificent explnit was bridged when Lind-bergt had a quiet lunch with the then small Anglo-American Press Association. . There were somewhere between six and ten of us, as I remember it, and this time Lindbergh did the talking. The plane company's man was there, but he hardly opened his mouth as Lindbergh explained the technical details of the flight with a mastery which made it clear why he had

No Callow Youth

He was no longer a callow youth, but a man who had comprehended clearly the prob-lems he faced and had found the correct solutions to them with sure clarity. They were risky, they required courage, but they were the solutions which offered the best chance of auccess. There was the quesdio-he had to balance its weight and cumbersomeness against the chance that given the limited range of the times. it would not be of much use in many circumstances. He had to calculate exactly the point at which the weight of another galloo of gasoline would use up the added fuel simply carrying itself-after which more fuel would mean less distance.

Most important of all, he had to decide whether to take off across the unflown Atlantic with only one engine to carry him across instead of two. He set-tled for one, "because," as I recall his answer, in gist, "If one of the two failed. I couldn't stay up very long anyway on one, and certainly couldn't make my goal; and with two, there was wice as much chance of engine failure." He bet on a single engine, and he won.

Speaking on his own, Lindbergh made it sound easy. He bad decided to fly a plane to Paris, so he had hopped off from New York, set a beeline course for Paris, and landed when he got there. It was as simple as that. Anybody could do it. But I spent the pext three years practically living at Le Bourget, watching planes take off to reach, in the end. nowhere, or waiting for planes that never arrived. It became clear that it wasn't simple at

Salzburg's New 'Magic Flute'-

By David Stevens

SALZBURG, Austria (IHT).-This year's new production of Die Zeuberflöte," the 13th in the Salzburg Festival's often illustrious line, was in the hands of the festival's religning artistic Lions-Giorgio Strehler and Herbert von Karalen-in the first collaboration of their projected series of joint Mozart productions.

It got off to a bumoy start. The festival-opening performance split critical opinion into several camps. Part of the eudience booed Strehler, who tetired from the scene indicating he wanted out of his Salzburg contract. He did not, it seems, have enough rehearsal time in the Large Festspielhaus to put everything in order: technical problems were evident at the premiere, and Ka-final renearsals.

It can only be hoped that all this blows over. At its fifth performance this "Magic Flute"while musically problematic-was one rich in theatrical imagination, ingenious in its use of the theater's space and technical possibilities, and true to the spirit—and often the letter—of Mozart and his actor-librettist, Schikaneder.

Stage Magic

Strehler and his designer, Luciero Damiani, used the theater's ultra-modern equipment to evoke the Viennese folk theater's fairytale world, with its delight in stage magic for its own sake that impregnates Schikaneder's libretto. There were also ideas recognizably borrowed from other Strehler productions-Papageno's

But the main inspiration was the opera's book, "The mountains separate and the stage is transformed into a magnificent space. The Queen of the Night sits on a throne adorned with transparent stars"; or "... Sarastro arrives ou a triumphal chariot drawn by six lions..." were instructions from the book given almost literal form on the stage. And where the book was not literally followed, its

Some blamed this extensive use of the dialogue for the producthe chief culprit here was Karajan, whose finely sculpted con-ducting included some deadly slow tempos that robbed several num-bers (the "Bei Männern" duet, for instance) of their life. If the whole opers had had the pace and springy vitality of the over-ture, there would be little to complain of.

The casting was variable, rang-ing from Edith Mathis's deliciously sung and beautifully spoken Pamina, Prey's lively and comic Papageno, and Jose van Dam's expressive Speaker, to Rene Kollo's stalwart figure but un-poetic phrasing as Tamino, Peter Meveu's routine Sarastro, and Louise Lebrun's barely adequate struggle with the Queen of the Night's colorature. The lesser parts were handsomely cast, par-ticularly Reri Grist's pert and lively Papagena, the Three Ladles (Jane Marsh, Trudeliese Schmidt, Sylvia Anderson), and the Three Boys, delectably sung by three Bad Tölz choirboys—winged and sometimes operating from the orchestra pit, sometimes from a orchestra pit, sometimes from a shell-shaped flying machine. Despite its delights, this pro-duction did have the feeling of a work in progress—one that can be more fully developed in succeeding festivals and, more important, one that can be more fully re-alized in rapport between stage director and conductor.

Strehler and Damiani were also represented this year in their 1965 production of "The Abduction from the Seraglio," which has broken all Salzburg operatic durability. This records for durability. This "Magic Flute," if yet unfinished, is a worthy successor in conception, already rich in achievement and even richer in potential.

The rich Salzburg concert ac-tivity—spread out among the prestige-heavy Vienna Philhar-monic concerts and the tradition el Mozart Matinees, serenades and chamber concerts—had their full quots of anticipation, fulfillment and disappointment.

Two conductor-planist pairings with the Philharmonic excited a lot of attention, but Sviatoslav Richter cancelled his scheduled appearance with Karl Böhm, while Maurizio Pollini's performance of the Schumann concerto with Karajan was a letdown, as both conductor and planist seemed to be trying to outdo each other in restraint until midway in the final movement, when Pollini brilliantly asserted himself. Karajan and the orchestra brought down the house after the intermission with a bravura performance of Dvorak's Eighth Symphony, although treating this music as an orchestral showplece effectively nullified its Bohemian folk atmosphere.
But Pollini more than fulfilled the expectations aroused by his solo recital, in which he traversed Schoenberg's entire output for piano in one densely packed hour before the intermission, then icilowed this with two Besthoven sonates, including an electrifying performance of the "Waldstein," plus some Schubert and Chopin encores. It was music-making on took her scross the continent and in Los Angeles she played before the Hollywood nobility. Later she was in the East again and, going to perform Marco Praga's "La Porta Chiusa" at a Pittsburgh theater, she struggled to open the blocked stage-door in a wintry storm. She caught pneumonia and died in a hotel the next day. The fascination of her life lingers and will remain. There is a dramatic unity to her story which emerges as a gorgeous paean to the

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (IHT).— This is now critics for the New York Times rate new films:

"Newman's Law," directed by Richard Heffron, trots out the mossy formula Nora Sayre thinks should be given at least one month's rest: "An incorruptible detective is accused of being on the take and is therefore suspended." Hence, says Sayre, "the outraged law-lover continues to investigate the case on his own. There's hardly an episode in this picture that you haven't seen before... It's disheartening to see George Peppard playing the quasi-Serpico. Here, he hardly bothers to act. Several good black actors-Roger Robinson, for example are wasted in this movie. which is also far too gloomy to pass for entertainment."

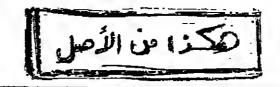

"The Girl from Petrovka" directed by Robert Ellis Miller, is

"gluey .romance" between a young Russian (Goldie Hawn) and an American newsman (Hal Holbrook). Nora Sayre did not enjoy the film which, she says, portrays the Soviet Union as "a deeply dismal country where people declare their love in graveyards, and sheets of rain or heavy snow descend when they're depressed." The script, based on the book by George Feifer, does not aid the performers, says Sayre. "We know that Miss Hawn can act. But her abundant energies have been made to seem merely winsome here.... Hal Holbrooke, who's bewitched by this sprightly depressive, has little to do beyond shaking his head when he thinks of her or smiling indulgently when he looks at It's hard to imagine what eudience this movie was made for.

"The news that the Vatican has suffered a financial reverse of exceptional proportions following the failure of the Wolff Bank of Hamburg is not factually correct," the Vatican spokesman said. "The minority participation of the Istituto per le Opere di Religione in the Bancs Unione, which is now a private Italian bank was not a large participation but was on the contrary very limited." he said.

The spokesman described the Istifuto per le Opere di Religione as being autonomous both from the Holy See and the Vatican City state. It is one of several Vatican-based banking operations. In an interview with the Milan newspaper Corriere della Sera on July 1, Michele Sindons, head of the Sindona group, said the Vati-can was a shareholder in two of his operations.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (WP). -President Ford's wage-price monitoring agency "obviously" will have to establish "some guidelines" for acceptable wage and price increases. Treasury Secretary William Simon said

He made clear to a group of reporters that there would not be a single numerical guideline, comparable to the 5.5 per cent wage standard that operated under Phases-II and III of the controls system that lapsed in April. Instead, he said the new agency "will have to look at each inis a very flexible system." His comments were the first indication that the Council on Wage and Price Stability, signed into law by President Ford on Saturday, would use a guidepost

Mr. Simon stressed that the wage-price guidelines he foresees would not be formal but more of a "modus operandi" under which the council would try to function, "They will have to do something about broad areas of wage and price increases," he said, "and you can call them guidelines if you want." Mr. Simon said that "I don't

When the news came that this year's U.S. corn crop would be withered by drought, concern was voiced immediately that the harvest would not be big enough to take care of domestic and export needs. Prices shot up accordingly, including those of wheat and

But livestock feeders have responded by cutting back the number of animals they feed. Ranchers have begun sending their steers directly to market, bypassing the feedlots. Export demand appears to remain strong, but some experts predict that actual shipments will fall far

pictura shouldn't be so had." .An Agriculture Department source agrees that livestock could gobble up a half-billion bushels less corn in the 1974-75 season, which starts Oct. 1, particularly if the crop totals about five billion bushels (as is now forecast) and if prices stay above $3.50 a

As for exports, a department official has stated that exports of wheat and feed grains in tha 1974-75 season will be about 300 million bushels less than the original predictions.

"Do you think European and Far Eastern livestock producers aren't as smart as U.S. farmers and will be feeding corn, wheat or other high-priced feeda?" one New York exporter asks rhetor-

Officials now say that corn exports could be in a range of 750 million to 900 million busitels, down from an earlier prediction of 1.15 billion bushels and actual projected exports in the current season (ending Sept. 30) of 1.25 billion bushels. Wheat exports now are expected to total 900 million to one billion bushels, compared to earlier forecasts of one billion or better and actual ship-ments of 1.15 billion bushels in the 1973-74 crop season. Soybean exports are expected to dip to between 515 and 535 million bushels from previous esti-mates of 545 million to 586 million. Agriculture Department officlais now expect that 340 million to 360 million bushels of corn will be left over at the end of the 1974-75 season, just before the 1975 harvest comes in. But grain-trade experts think that the carry-over could end up at around 700 million bushels because nf lower domestie and foreign demand. About 428 million bushels are expected to be in the carryover at the end of the current

Firms' Cash Position Worries U.S. Experts

By Soma S. Golden

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).— Not since the Penn Central collapsed in mid-1970 have the clouds hung so heavy and dark over Wall Street.

Once again analysts are won-dering if the country is in danger of a liquidity crisis that could spread like a fever through today's debt-burdened businesses, tossing one after another into

Despite glowing reports of cor-porate profits this year, some leading financial analysts are worried that the healthy look may be only skin deep.

"We've been in a liquidity flap since about April," said one top economist for a major New York bank, who insisted on anonymity. e also cautioned against writing shout liquidity in a way that might intensify fears in the financial community.

But there are worries. Tilford Gaines, senior vice-president and economist of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., said last week, "Liquidity strains in the nonfinancial business sector are really quite acute." To hide this fact, he said, would be "like sticking your head in the sand."

Sees Bankruptcies Mr. Gaines, who was one of the first to spot the emerging liquidity crisis in 1970, expects to see "a rather large number of busi-ness failures" in the months ahead particularly in sectors with "a lot of competition, low markups, large inventory investments and small capitalization."

Richard Worley, vice-president and economist at Goldman, Sachs & Co., seems to see the sama wr'ing on the wall. "Solvency will probably be a major problem for some isolated companies and maybe even some big ones," he says, but "that doesn't mean the problem will feed upon itself and infect the entire corporate sector." Liquidity is a word that is difficult to define and a concept that is difficult to measure. Used as a synonym for solvency, liquid-ity refers to a firm's ability to raise the cash necessary to meet its debts when they come due. What is critical in measuring a company's liquidity is not the absolute level of its cash (or short-term investments that can be speedily and cheaply turned into cash) but the relationship of

In recent months analysts have spewed forth ratios as fast as automatic serving machines toss out tennis balls for practice shots. Unfortunately, the flurry of statistics does not answer with any finality the questions at hand: Is corporate liquidity adequate? What if the economy goes into a deep slide? Most analysts seem to agree that during the last few decades corporations have been able to cut down necessary cash balances hecause of improved communications, faster banking services and computerized inventory manage-Moreover, economists say that

What lies ahead,

"As long as things go well modern banks will continue to lend to these firms on their expected cash flow. It's only when things are not so good that banks start to look at the company's liquidity ratios, and worry that inventories might have to be sold at a loss or investment plans cut "The fact that banks are starting to look at ratios now means something," Mr. Wojnilower conchided ominously, It is the relative health of corporate profits that has convinced some economists to reject the notion of a chain-reaction liquidity crisis lurking down the road. Data pulled together by Irwin Kellner, vice-president and econ-omist at Manufacturers Hanover, show what ha calls a "surprisingly good profit picture, considering the sluggish nature of economic activity this year."

In U.S. Reach A Record Yield WASHINGTON, Aug. 27 (WP)

The Treasury paid a record 9.9 per cent interest rate to bill purchasers at yesterday's regular weekly auction, as the average yield on both the three-month and six-month securities soured by more than a percentage point to record highs. Most analysts relate the sharp increase to the Treasury's an-nouncement last week that it would sell an extra $2 hillion in Treasury bills in a special auction tomorrow to meet its shortterm cash needs. Because the announcement inreased the hill supply to a market that was already swelling, the price of these bills went down. Since the hills are sold at a discount, the lower the price to the purchaser, the higher his interest On 91-day bills, of which the Treasury sold $2.8 hillion, the rate averaged 9.908 per cent, compared with 8.816 per cent last week. On the $2 billion of six-month hills it sold, the Treasury paid an average rate of 9.930 per cent, up from last week's 8.899 per cent. At today's close in New York, three-mooth hills were quoted at an average of 9.68 per cent while six-month bills averaged 9.7 per boom year of 1988—about $73 bil-lion (1958 dollars). Mr. Worley of Goldman, Sachs stresses the strength of another

General Motors is piling some of its biggest percentage price increases on its smallest cars this autumn, as well as tacking some fat price tags on four newly in-troduced little models. GM, under pressure from the White House, announced last week that it was rolling back price increases on 1975-model cars an average of about $416, or 8.2 per cent. But it did not make detailed price lists avail-able until yesterday.

Those lists depict price in-creases ranging as high as 19 per cent. There are also some small cuts of $37, or 1 per cent, on a few models on which certain standard equipment was removed. The biggest percentage boost is oo small cars which went up far cent. For example, GM's cheapest car, the subcompact Vega. climbed to $2,799, up $294, or 12 per cent, from the cost it carried Prices no slightly bigger compacts rose from about 12 to more

more than the average 82 per than 14 per cent, The Pontlac Firebird Formula jumped $703 to $4,362, up more than 19 per cent. A GM spokesmao said that the price list was "In keeping" with decrease announced He explained that the 8.2 per cent figure was a sales-weighted average, based on the past experience of retail cars and trucks delivered and equipment ordered. He said the price list adheres strictly to the average increase announced last week.

Ford Cuts Production DETROIT, Aug. 27 (NYT) .-

Ford Molor, with a three-month supply of unsold Pintos, is cutting back production of the subcompact car but says it is still confident that the small-car segment of the market will account for about half of this year's sales. The No. 2 auto firm announced yesterday it will close the car assembly line at its plant at San Jose, Callf., for 10 days begin-ning Sept. 18, a move that will furlough 2,000 workers. When the plant reopens Sept.

30, the production line speed will be cut from 54 to 40 units an be on indefinite layoff. The industry average backlog 54 days. The Pinto backlog is not the highest in the industry. Chrysler Corp.'s Plymouth Valiant compact had a 105-day supply and the Dodge Dart a 96-day hacklog among domesticbuilt cars. Among the imports, there was a 113-day supply of the Dodge Colt, However, Chrysler said there were no plans for any shutdowns at its plants.

The pattern through that period has been one of steady retreat in light to moderate trading, punctuated by periodic attempts at technical rallies that have faded very shortly after they hegan. Such a rally showed up in midsession yesterday but was unable to last even to the close of that session, and prices resumed a broad pullback this morning. Volume today totaled 12.97 million shares compared with 14.63 million yesterday, Du Pont, one of the 30 Dow Jones industrial atocks, sank 7 7.8 points to 112 1/2. Analysts said there was no apparent news development to account for the decline, hut noted that the issue had been recently under pressure following Du Pont's announce-ment Aug. 19 that it planned to adopt a new inventory accounting system that reduces inflation's effect on earnings and will cut profit to $5.10 a share from the previously reported $6.27 a share. Analysts also noted some negative comment this week oo Du Pont's earnings outlook.

Mercor was one of the most active issues on the NYSE, diving 7 3/9 to 18 3/4, Mobil Oil said yesterday that its cash tender offer of $35 a share to acquire control of Marcor had expired and would not be extended. as well as name because he imagines he is extending a long line of ancestral continuity, a history of craftsmanship as a paradigm for integrity. He is a "maker," shaping with his hands what he considers to be palpable proofs of order. His perfectionism in his work is a form of prayer, an offering to an absolute standard that serves him as an organizing principle or religion. He is a "true believer," a superior example of the Zen-in-the-art-of-sandalmaking movement that is sweeping America.

He is 29 and divorced, for he has discovered that of all materials, people are the most unstable. His guru-like teacher, Ottl, has always told him that, in his craft, the metal always remains, cannot be destroyed. Mistakes can be corrected. But when his wife, Angela, betrays him, at the first beck of a third-rate poet, he feels that this sort of slip can never be salvaged, never be re-heated and shaped to his satisfaction.

Silversmith is content, mono maniacally absorbed in his work, for which he has a genuine talent, when ho is struck by a car and suffers a broken arm. Here the reader has to swallow the sort of coincidence that we expect in Dickens, not in a contemporary novel: The driver of the car is that same poet, Elliot Hopper, who cuckolded Silver-smith eight years earlier. Some-how though, this is not disturbing. When an author gets you on his side, as Mr. Dintenfass does in "Figure 8." you allow him. all sorts of liberties.

His arm in a cast, cut off from his work, Silversmith restlessly seeks out the poet's daughter, Florrie, who was with him at the time of the accident. It was while he was giving swimming lessons to her, a charming 12year-old, that her father and his. wife held their assignations. When Silversmith becomes Florrie's lover, the figure 8 of the title is completed. An interwoven symmetry is established.

Florrie is sophisticated, in the sense that she has lost more convictions than she has preserved. Silversmith's innocence appeals to her nostalgia for herself. He corresponds to the wistful, not the rebellious side of her unhappy ehildhood She works as a re searcher in animal behavior for a children's book publisher and: Silversmith strikes her as an eodearingly awkward animal Each is so alien to the other that they imagine they are in love.

Plorrie's father is not happy. about it. A fair exchange is a: bad bargain. To make ithings worse he is at a difficult stage in his life. His poet's persona appears to be exhausted and hereduced to philandering and performing an intellectual striptease as poet in residence at an Rastern college. He is forced into theatrics because the only thing poetic about him was his poetry. and it has temporarily or permanently, evaporated. "His life, having begun in earnest, seemed to be ending in farce."

Hopper is an interesting take. Born Holsman, he published his first poems under that aegis, but when his life veered from hamish, Holzman-like sincerities, be changed his name and his stylo to Hopper, acquired "a new voice. hard odged experience, free, libidinal, bold ... MICHAEL Silversmith chooses the bandwagon of fashionah to be a silversmith in fact, modernity and now he finds him self a castaway on that ar island. In a second coincidence if you have one, you might : well have two—he finds Silve smith's former wife on the san campus and consoles himse with her. She is no longer ve attractive, but like other be poets, Hopper subsists on the sec ond-rate irony of such situs tions.

> Florrie, meanwhile, has alier ated Silversmith from his ph tonic garden of Eden. Work, orde and unmischievous hands are r longer enough for him. He fine his former life too dehumanize too ascetic. To work with living materials, already realized form like Piorrie this is his new pa: sion. His faith, bowever, is to much for her. In her permission world, faith is the one unforgiv able pornography, a form i metaphysical rape. She defend herself against the possibility commitment by perceiving Silver smith as "pathetic," someon whose whole soul, not only h

It is the missing in gredient that might have mad him a whole man. His ange brings about what the psycholo gist Rollo May has called "th ecstasy of violence," a "unitin of the self in action."

In the last section of "Figur 8," Mr. Dintenfass shows Hoppe and Florrie, father and daughter "trying to pierce their common trony," the last convulsion of the generation gap. Silversmith find himself purged by his anger shaken from the long sleep o his passivity. But though "be ba lost his faith, he has kept hi categories." (I have forgotten to source of the quotation.) While he no longer believes in an "underlying scheme to reflect a work of order and hope," while he now sees "only fragments of shape." he finds another kind of support closer to the bone, to sustain him. "Okay," he tells himself "I'm made to dream; hopelessly futilely, but still to dream." Improbable as it may seem.

Only U.S. Fight Fans Scared by Ali's Talk

By Gerald Eskenazi
NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).—With the costlest title fight in history only one month away, promoters are becoming increasingly worried that Muhammad Ali may have scared sway Americans from traveling to the bout in Zaire, the country once known as the Belgian Congo.

"This talk about the rumble in the jungle and voodoo dolls looking like George Foreman—why, it would scare me away," said Don King, the evangelical former convict who belped arrange the extravaganza.

All is scheduled to face Foreman, the heavyweight titleholder, at 3 a.m. (0300 GMT) on Sept. 25. A prime source of revenues for the promoters, who have exclusive world rights to the sale of tickets, was to be a package deal from New York. The only way to go to Zaire from here was through the

The promoters spoke of 5,000 Americans going to the fight, and more than 7,000 people in all visiting Kinshasa, the capital, where the fight will be staged.

King now says the price will be lowered for a second time. He said a person could get a round-trip deal, with fight tickets, for $1.500. This is almost $1,000 less than originally advertised. What about people who had bought the higher-priced tickets? Well, we haven't sold any," King admits.

The only tickets sold in this country so far have been to the press, along with about 150 other tickets that included a

A visitor to the ballroom at noon last Priday saw 120 empty seats, an empty chair at the front of the room and an unoccupied lectern. In fact, the whole room was empty except for neatly stacked travel folders and brochures describing prices for the fight and vaccination information.

A man at the door said no one had come in to ask about the fight and no officials were around.

But people were busy at Inter-Continental Hotels, the subsidiary of Pan American Airways that is providing food and other amenities for Zaire for the bont.

"We're figuring on six days, three meals a day for 6,000 people," said James Potter, vice-president of operations and planning for Inter-Continental. He said he hadn't given the orders yet "because we're not sura who's going to pay us-tha

But on stand-by order in a warehouse in Perth Ambov N.J., were some items Potter said would be available: 27,000 teabags, 100,000 packets of mustard, 36,000 cups of soup, including split pea; 300,000 packets of sugar; 50,000 coathangers, 15.000 rolls of toilet tissue; quiche lorraine, chicken Klev, omelets and lox.

King is the man who found a German lawyer who knew of a Swiss-based company that was interested in developing business in Zaire. The Swiss company has guaranteed each fighter $5 million.

Often lost in the controversy about the fight is a three-day music festival to be staged before the bout. King said such performers as James Brown, Aretha Franklin and Stevle Wonder were set to appear.

"Rinshasa is a city like any other big city," he said. "We're bringing in buses. We're bringing in food. We'll show everyone a black netion can run things perfectly. But we need white people. And white people may have been turned off because of what All says."

Reds Lose Ground On Error in Eighth

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.-Sec-

The loss dropped the Reds three games behind the idle Los Angeles Dodgers in the National

With the score tled, 5-5, the Phils loaded the bases in the eighth against Cincinnati's ace reliever Clay Carroll as Mike Hen-Bob Boone sacrificed and pinchhitter Bill Robinson was walked intentionally.

Cash then hit a grounder to Kennedy, who had taken over at second in the eighth when Darrel Chaney moved over to third. replacing Dan Driessen. Kennedy tried to beat Anderson home with his throw and prevent the tiebreaking run from scoring.

But the late throw sailed about 10 feet wide of the plate, and both Anderson and Unser raced home.

Braves 3. Expos 2

At Montreal, Dusty Baker hit his 16th homer and Buzz Cepra, with ninth-inning relief help from Max Leon, beat the Expos for the third time this season as Atlanta won, 3-2. Baker's eightbinning homer boosted the Braves lead to 3-0.

Mets 5. Astros 4 At New York, Rusty Staub's two-out single in the ninth inning scored Bud Harrelson to cap a three-run rally and give the Mets a 5-4 victory over Houston. With one out in the ninth, pinch-bltter Duffy Dyer hit a singla off the glove of Astros third-baseman Doug Rader. Ted Martinez then pinch-hit a double, scoring Dyer from first. Martinez advanced to third on a throwing and Gerd Muller refusing to play even against Switzerland for West Germany, things are looking very different for the World Cup winners than they did on the morning of the Cup Final. Breitner's transfer surprised nic. Not because the player was willing to leave his native Bivaria, and a successful team, for a waning one in a foreign country, but because Bayern was prepared to let him go. I knew, from conversation with Breitner. that the opportunity of making a lot of money in a Latin country attracted him. At the time. though, we were talking about Italian soccer. I euggested be would not be very happy playing in it. He replied, with a smile, that it was very lucrative, as in-deed it is. He should certainly do better et Real than poor Gunter Netzer. For one thing. he is considerably younger and not prone, as Netzer is, to recurrent injuries to the thigh muscle, injuries caused by Netzer's ex-ceptionally long stride.

Do you remember North Korea? It was the team which came out of nowhere to beat Italy and give Portugal a dread-ful fright in the quarterficul of the 1966 World Cup. Since then, It has declined to euch an extent that Iran knocked it out of the 1972 Olympic qualifying tourna-ment. North Korea fell heavily by the wayside in the World Cuo qualifying tournament, too.

Now, there ere eigns of life. After their defeat by the Iran-ians, it decided, as many a Communist country has done in tha past, to put most of its eggs in one basket-to concentrate the international players in a team called Pyongyang April 25.

The club (surprise, surprise) was immediately admitted to the Pirst Division and (surprise again) immediately won it. It is, most appropriately, under the managerial charge of our old friend, Pak Doo Ik, the dentist whose goal knocked Italy out at Middlesbrough in 1966.

The Evil of Work

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON-I read in the list in the war on inflation, They are 500 million marginal people Service in the margin, like service on the earth. These are people the world can't use. There is no economic need for them-no jobs, not enough natural resources, not enough arable land, not enough food, Socially and economically, they are useless, if not worse, since they cause political upheaval high taxes and slums. It must be very dispiriting being one of the world's marginal people. Knowing that the blue-chip people wish you would just disappear cannot belp selfcsteem

Even at its best, as in the United States, where old people in the margin dine on pet foods and marginal mothers are tyrannized by welfare bureaucrats, the sustenance offered by a robust state is poisooed by the bile of the benefactors. Uselessness and idleness stand high oo the American tablets of cardinal sin.

More and more Americans will hecome marginal very soon now. These are the people who will have to move off the comployment list as inflation shakes down the economy. Official economists are talking about unemployment going as high as 6 per cent before inflation begins to slow down, and pessimists are talking about 7 per cent

And afterward, what? Shall we go on, old style, abusing them as idlers, welfare bums, failures, shameful takers of government handouts, life's losers, people who have let the country down?

These traditional views rest on the notion that work is good and that people who work are, therefore good, too and ought not to be burdened with the support of people who don't work (bad. Surely, however, this traditional view fails to recognize economic reality. If more people must go into the margin to halt inflation, then the people who so are doing papers recently that there should be honored, not reviled. in Vietnam a few years ago, may be an honor largely confined to the luckless, but we can st least refrain from treating it with scorn.

We might go further toward a truly sensible policy. At present the ranks of marginal people are filled by a sort of draft policy: Nobody asks you if you want to become marginal, you are simply plucked out of your life's work one day and pressed into the

Would it not be sound to follow the military's example by abolishing the draft and switching to a volunteer margin? Vigorous recruitment programs might persuade workers in secure jobs to leave them for service against inflation in the margin. All those who now complain about having work hard to support the idlers in the margin should be easy targets for recruitment, persuaded as they sppear to be of the pleasures of idleness and the burdensome nature of work.

I am not naive about this. I realize that there is a serious ob-stacic to recruitment. This is the oational faith in what President Nixon used to call "the work ctille," a conviction that working is ethical and not working iso't.

The government can change this with its propaganda machinery. What, efter all, is so ethical about work when the country is crying out for unemployment to save its economy from being inflated into an uneconomy?

If the country needs fewer workers, oot more, it has every reason to preach the nobility of the noowork ethic. Uncle Sam oceds idlers. That should be its

Once we lured into the margin all the additional people necessary to save the dollar, what would we do with them? Give them a distinctive lapel buttoo they could be proud of, I suppose, and some sort of unemployoieut compensa-tion until the crisis passed, and when enough time had gone by, go back to wishing they would disappear, like all old

The Debate on the Equal Rights Amendment

By Linda Greenhouse

NEW YORK, Aug. 27 (NYT).—Federal approval of the Equal Rights Amendment, only a few states sby of final ratification, is proving to be an clusive prize for its proponents.

At the same time that President Ford has given strong public endorsement to the amendment-designating yesterday, the 54th anniversary of women's suffrage, as Women's Equality Day-proponents of the Equal Rights Amendment are becoming concerned about a backlash on the local level, even in states that had been considered safe territory.

New York State, one of the first states to approve the federal amendment in 1972. when Congress voted to present it to the states for ratification, provides a good example of the shifting mood.

Rather than wait for full federal passage of the amendment nationally, women's rights advocates here pressed to pass B state amendment identical to the federal legislation, hoping that it would become law more quickly on the local level. The state constitution requires that proposed amendments be passed twice, by separately elected legislatures. Although on its first round the amendment passed unanimously in the State Senate and got only two dissenting votes in the Assembly. knowledgeable women think it may have trouble even getting out of committee next

"If we can get it onto the floor, I'm not concerned," said Ross Graham, coordinator of the New York State Women's Political Caucus and an experienced Senate staff aide. "But my concern about getting it to the floor is very real."

There are several reasons for the soddeo pessimism. Assemblywoman Constance Cook of Ithaca, who introduced the state amendment, is not seeking re-election this year. As a Republican, and an important committee chairman, Mrs. Cook was able to give the amendment an aura of majority party respectability.

Also, the lobbying against the amendment, very limited this year, will apparently be highly organized the second time around. Earlier this month, three anti-ERA women's groups joined forces to create Operatioo Wake-Up with the sole purpose of defeating the state amendment.

Rita Burke, president of the Women's Freedom Fund, one of the three organizations, said that Operation Wake-Up hopes to maintain an office in Albaoy during the legislative session.

The two other organizations involved in Operation Wake-Up are HOW, the state branch of a national group called Happiness of Womanhood, and WUNDER, based in Westchester County, which staods for Women United to Defend Existing

Opponents fear that the amendmentwhich would outlaw all forms of sex discrimination based on governmental action -would also deprive women of special privileges they now have. For instance, they fear that, if men and women were treated equally, women might somehow lose the option of staying home to raise children because they'd be forced to work like men. They are afraid, too, that alimony might be outlawed because men do

Women's rights advocates dismiss both objections. They contend that no woman would be forced to work—out if a woman chose to do so, the amendment could only benefit her. And rather than deprive a roman of alimooy, they say laws could be written under the amendment to require support for dependent spouses regardless of sex, so that a man might be cligible for alimony if he was the one to stay bome and take care of the children. As for objections that women might become subject to the draft, sopporters say this is a most point since the draft no longer exists for anyone. They also argue of privacy would take priority. The debate has caused concern among proponents, such as Ross Graham, who believe enough controversy will only serve to unleash the legislators' natural instinct to avoid controversy at all costs by keeping the amendment in committee. New York was among the first wave of states to ratify the federal ERA-36 in the first nine months after final congressional passage on March 22, 1972. Since then the momentum has altered drastlcally. Four state legislatures ratified the dment in 1973 and three have done so this year for a total of 33 out of the required 38-three quarters of all the

All of the 1? remaining states have taken some orgative action on the ERA, rejecting it either in committee or on the floor of one of the houses. Two other states, Nebraska and Tennessee, have rescinded their initial ratifications, but there is a legal dispute over whether those reversals are binding and it may well have to be settled in the courts.

Tha ERA has seven years from the date, of congressional passage—or until March 23, 1979—to he ratified by the states or die. The more time that elapses, the more difficult the job becomes, partly because the remaining states, many of them in the Deep South, are the seats of hard-core resistance and partly because the national opposition has more time to organize.

The National Organization for Women, which monitors the ERA's progress through its legislative office in Washington, has seen evidence of heavy spending by big business interests, especially insurance companies in anti-ERA campaigns. The ERA would make it unconstitutional to charge different insurance premiums to men and women if the difference was not supported by actuarial statistics.

Cathy Reverts, a special consultant on the amendment for NOW, said the other day that ratification was possible in five states during the 1975 legislative sessions. The five are Illmois (where the ERA actually received a majority vote in June, but fell short of the three-fifths vote required by that state's constitution); North Dakota (where the ERA was ratified in the Senate last year but lost by three votes in the House); Florida (where the losing Senate margin in April was two votes), and Indiana and Louisiana, where the amendment has passed one house since 1972.

A state legislature that rejects the emendment can subsequently reverse itself, as the Connecticut House of Representatives did last year in approving the

NOW is working in coalition with the National Women's Political Cancus, the League of Women Voters, the Business and Professional Women's Association and Common Cause. The American Bar Association endorsed the amendment earlier this month. And on Thursday, President Ford urged its ratification.
